A Guide to day
ticket fisheries in the Midlands

ENVIRONMENT AGENCY

"I am privileged to have the opportunity of introducing the latest edition of this ever popular Fishing Guide published by the Midlands Region of the Environment Agency.

I believe this Guide, together with other lines of communication such as the 'Fisheries News' magazine which is freely available, offers reassurance to anglers and other river users that the Agency's commitment to safeguarding and improving the water environment is as strong as ever. I can assure you that there is a real awareness within the Agency of the vital environmental role anglers play which can be enhanced still further by anglers continuing to both support the work of Fisheries staff and to provide information on the health of our rivers. Real benefits have resulted from this partnership to date including improvements to fish habitat, river water quality and river flows. This partnership is one which the Agency wishes to encourage and considers must continue if together we are to secure the long term well-being of our fisheries for both present and future generations.

I ask all recipients of this guide to help the Agency respond to the environmental challenges which lie ahead by keeping us informed about any potential problems identified."

Best wishes and tight lines.

INTRODUCTION

A GUIDE FOR ANGLERS

The Midlands Region of the Environment Agency stretches from the Humber estuary in the north to the Severn estuary in the south and from the Welsh borders to the East Midlands. For Fisheries purposes, the area covered and officers responsible remain the same as those encompassed by the former NRA Severn and Trent catchment boundaries (see map overleaf). With over 7000 km of river, almost 1000 km of canal and an increasing number of stillwaters, the Region contains an extremely varied and important fisheries resource.

ENVIRONMENT AGENCY

All the major rivers and canals support valuable coarse fisheries along much of their length. The Midlands Region contains some of the largest and most important rivers in the country. Rivers such as the Trent, Avon and Severn have all hosted national and international angling championships. Other rivers such as the Teme, Dove and Derwent are prized for individual catches of barbel, chub, salmon and trout. Many smaller rivers provide good sport for both the serious and occasional angler and all play a part in contributing the quality of life of many people.

The day ticket information contained in this guide has been divided into five sections:-

Coarse fishing - Rivers
Coarse fishing - Stillwaters
Game fishing - Rivers
Game fishing - Stillwaters
Canal fishing

Simply refer to the type of fishery required and find rivers and stillwaters listed alphabetically. There is also a nearest town reference for each entry to help route planning and most importantly, a contact address or phone number which should be used before making your fishing trip to avoid any disappointment.

If you have any information which would assist in the updating of this guide please contact The Fisheries Department, Environment Agency, Sapphire East, 550 Streetsbrook Road, Solihull. B91 1QT.

Every effort has been made to ensure that the information given in the guide is correct, the Environment Agency cannot accept liability for any errors or omissions. Fishing rights change hands and therefore anglers are urged to make preliminary enquiries before travelling to a selected venue.

WHY DO YOU NEED A LICENCE?

Every angler must have an Environment Agency rod licence before he or she starts fishing (see page 10). Not only is fishing without a licence a criminal offence, carrying a maximum fine of £2500, it also deprives the Agency of the funds it needs to carry out vital work. The Fisheries section of the Agency is becoming increasingly reliant on income from licence sales as Government funding is reduced (see Fig 1). Anglers who do not buy a licence are spoiling the sport for others and threaten the long-term health of our fisheries.

WHAT DOES THE EA DO FOR FISHERIES?

Under the Environment Act 1995 (and formerly the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1975) the Environment Agency has a statutory duty to maintain, improve and develop fisheries. We do this for the benefit of anglers, commercial netmen and the general public.

WHAT DOES THIS MEAN?

- We can use various legal powers to protect fish and fisheries from over-exploitation and other damaging activities
- We can develop a programme to improve those fisheries which have previously been damaged through development or neglect
- We can increase the availability of fishing opportunities, both for recreational and commercial fishing

THE ENVIRONMENT AGENCY WILL ACHIEVE THESE AIMS THROUGH;

ENFORCEMENT

Our team of highly skilled Fishery Inspectors and Water Bailiffs patrol the region's fisheries, making sure that anglers and commercial netmen have valid licences and are abiding by the necessary byelaws. In 1995/6 Agency staff, challenged 40,850 anglers in this region and this resulted in over 1000 licence and byelaw prosecutions. Make sure you get a licence before you go fishing.

In addition, specially trained staff protect Salmon against poachers. Nowadays, poachers are often formed into highly organised criminal gangs.

Under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1975 we ensure that fishing and fisheries continue to exist together on sustainable basis. It is an offence to stock fish into any water without permission and laws are aimed at preventing the spread of diseases and exotic fish species. Anyone wishing to introduce fish into any watercourse or stillwater should contact their local Environment Agency office.

REGULATION

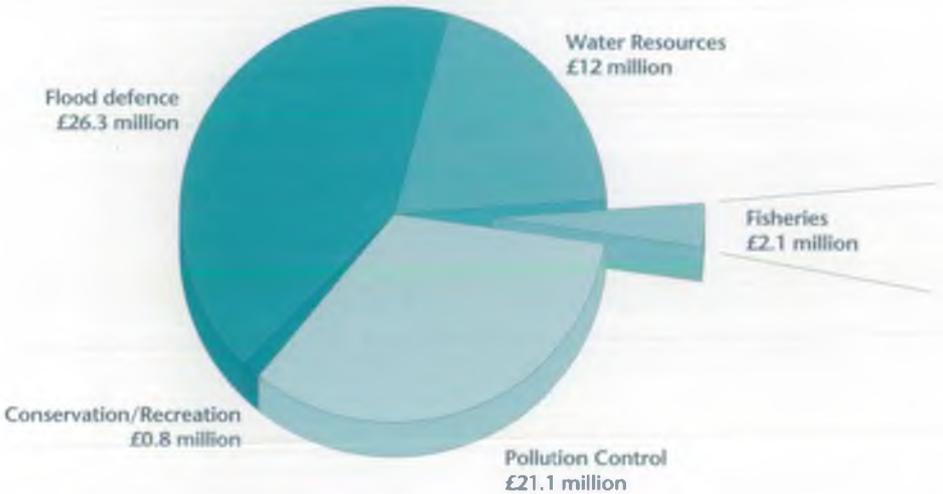

Fig 1. Total Regional Expenditure 96/97

To protect and improve fisheries, we must first assess the general nature and health of the fish stocks. Agency scientists carried out surveys at 426 sites across the region in 1995/6 using electric fishing, netting and echo-sounding techniques.

MONITORING

We are dedicated to improving the water quality of rivers and canals. A vital part of the work of the Fisheries department is to make sure that the needs of fish and fish stocks are catered for in water quality improvement programmes. In addition, Fisheries staff are investigating new methods of combating the effects of acid rain on upland tributaries.

WATER QUALITY IMPROVEMENTS

PHYSICAL HABITAT IMPROVEMENTS

The physical nature of a river is as important to fish as the quality of the water. Many rivers have been canalised in the past to speed land drainage and help navigation. Fisheries staff are trying to restore as many rivers as possible to a more natural state. This is done by constructing meanders, riffles, groynes and fish passes to improve the opportunities for fish spawning and survival.

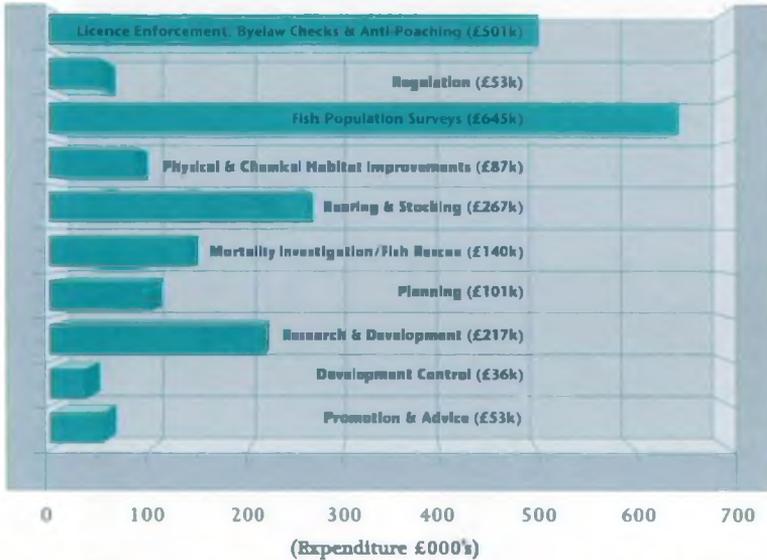

Fig 2. Fisheries Expenditure – Environment Agency Midlands Region

REARING AND STOCKING

Our coarse fish farm, located at Calverton, Nottinghamshire is the only one of its kind in Europe and produces 300,000 high quality dace, chub, barbel and roach each year. These are needed to replace fish lost through pollution and to give improving river fisheries a “kick-start”. This region also rears 100,000 salmon fry each year which are stocked into the River Severn and its tributaries.

FISH MORTALITIES

Unfortunately, whether it be accidental, deliberate or due to natural causes, pollution does occur and does kill a large number of fish each year. We try to attend every reported pollution incident, to establish the cause of the problem, to take action and decide whether to prosecute. Where possible, fish are moved to other waters for safety and returned when the water quality has been restored. In 1995/6, there were 234 such incidents, accounting for 105,000 fish deaths. This was a large and unwelcome increase on the previous year and was mainly due to the prolonged warm dry summer. Large amounts of pollution were washed out of Birmingham's storm sewers by severe storms at the height of the dry spell. The low summer flows in several rivers, but principally the Tame and Trent, meant that there was very little dilution and there were several major fish kills as a result of dissolved oxygen being stripped out of the water. Whilst prompt action by the Environment Agency saved a large number of fish, this incident has set back the re-establishment of the Tame as an important fishery.

If you see pollution or any activity which may damage the water environment, please contact the Environment Agency on its Freephone Emergency Number - 0800 80 70 60.

We are consulted over development plans and seek to influence Local Authorities over proposals for buildings, roads or other land uses to protect fisheries and other aspects of the river environment.

All the above activities cost money (see Fig.2) and in 1996/97 we spent over £2 million on vital Fisheries work in the Midlands Region. This service costs each angler the price of a licence - just £16.00 for the vast majority - and with guidance from the Regional Fisheries Advisory Committee, we take great care that this income is spent in the most cost-effective way. We appreciate and are encouraged by the high degree of support we receive from anglers, in terms of licence sales and the information provided by the "eyes and ears" of the river bank. The well-being of fishing and fisheries is an important concern of the new Environment Agency and is dependant on the goodwill and support of anglers - for the future of your sport, please make sure you have a valid licence.

The annual rod licence is valid from the 1st April, or the date of purchase if later, up to the following 31st March. Licences are available from all Post Offices.

PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT CONTROL

THE ANGLER'S ROLE

REMEMBER

COURTESY

Please take into account other river users and:-

- Take care not to block the footpath with your fishing tackle
- Look out for others when casting
- Appreciate some boats may need to come close to the bank

CONSERVATION

Conservation of our rivers benefits everyone especially anglers so:-

- Take all your tackle home. Hooks and line are lethal to wildlife
- Don't leave food or bait when you leave
This encourages vermin and increases the health risk
- Leave your peg tidy. Litter, especially plastic will stay around for years and is a danger to wildlife and livestock
- Help conserve fish stocks by following the NFA keep net code and match rules

SAFETY

Water can be very dangerous - do not take unnecessary risks.

Fishing near overhead powerlines can be extremely dangerous - do not take unnecessary risks. More information can be obtained from the National Federation of Anglers.

HEALTH

Weil's Disease (Leptospirosis) - All rivers and natural bodies contain pathogens which can be harmful to health. In particular, the leptospiral bacteria which cause Weil's disease can be present wherever rodents are found specially near or in water. Weil's disease can be dangerous and in extreme cases can result in serious illness or death. The infection is contracted mainly through open cuts and abrasion in the skin. Make sure all cuts are covered with a waterproof plaster or waterproof clothing. The disease often feels like flu in the early stages and early advice should be sought from your doctor if you develop the symptoms following a fishing trip.

FISHING LICENCES

To fish any waters within the Midlands Region every angler aged twelve years or older must possess a current Environment Agency Rod Fishing Licence. With the appropriate licence you can fish with rod and line any where in England and Wales but remember, you will also need to obtain permission to fish where necessary, from the owners or tenants of the fishing rights. A number of fishing rights owners offer day ticket waters and many of these appear in the following pages.

If you are aged 12 to 16 years, 65 years or over, or receive invalidity benefit or severe disability allowance you are eligible for a concessionary licence. You are also eligible if you receive a war pension which includes unemployability supplement. Children under the age of 12 do not require a licence.

Licences can be obtained from every Post Office in England and Wales and are available in each of the categories below for Salmon/Sea Trout and Non-Migratory Trout/Coarse Fish.

Full/Concessionary licence - valid from 1st April to 31st March

8 day - valid for 8 consecutive days

1 day - valid for 24 consecutive hours

You may, by law, be required to produce your licence if you go fishing. You should therefore replace your licence if you lose it. A full or concessionary replacement licence is available for a nominal charge. Follow the instructions on the tear-off slip attached to your licence.

PLEASE KEEP THE SLIP SAFE AND SEPARATE FROM YOUR LICENCE

Note: 1 day and 8 day licenses cannot be replaced.

ROD FISHING BYELAWS

Please note that when fishing for salmon, trout, coarse fish or eels, you must comply with the Environment Agency's Rod Fishing Byelaws. In addition, you will find that angling clubs and fishery owners may impose additional, stricter regulations on their waters.

Byelaw booklets are available free of charge from the Environment Agency - please phone or write to your local area office or the regional headquarters.

Whilst some byelaws are national and apply throughout England and Wales, many vary from one region to another so as to accommodate local needs. Please make sure you are aware of and abide by the byelaws for the region in which you are fishing.

CONSULTATIVES

The Severn Fisheries Consultative Council provides a means for representatives of angling clubs and other fishery interests to discuss matters affecting fisheries. Meetings are held at Birmingham Angler's Association headquarters on four Saturday's throughout the year with fisheries officers from the Environment Agency in attendance. The views of the SFCC are taken into account by the Regional Fisheries Advisory Committee of the Midlands Region of the Environment Agency.

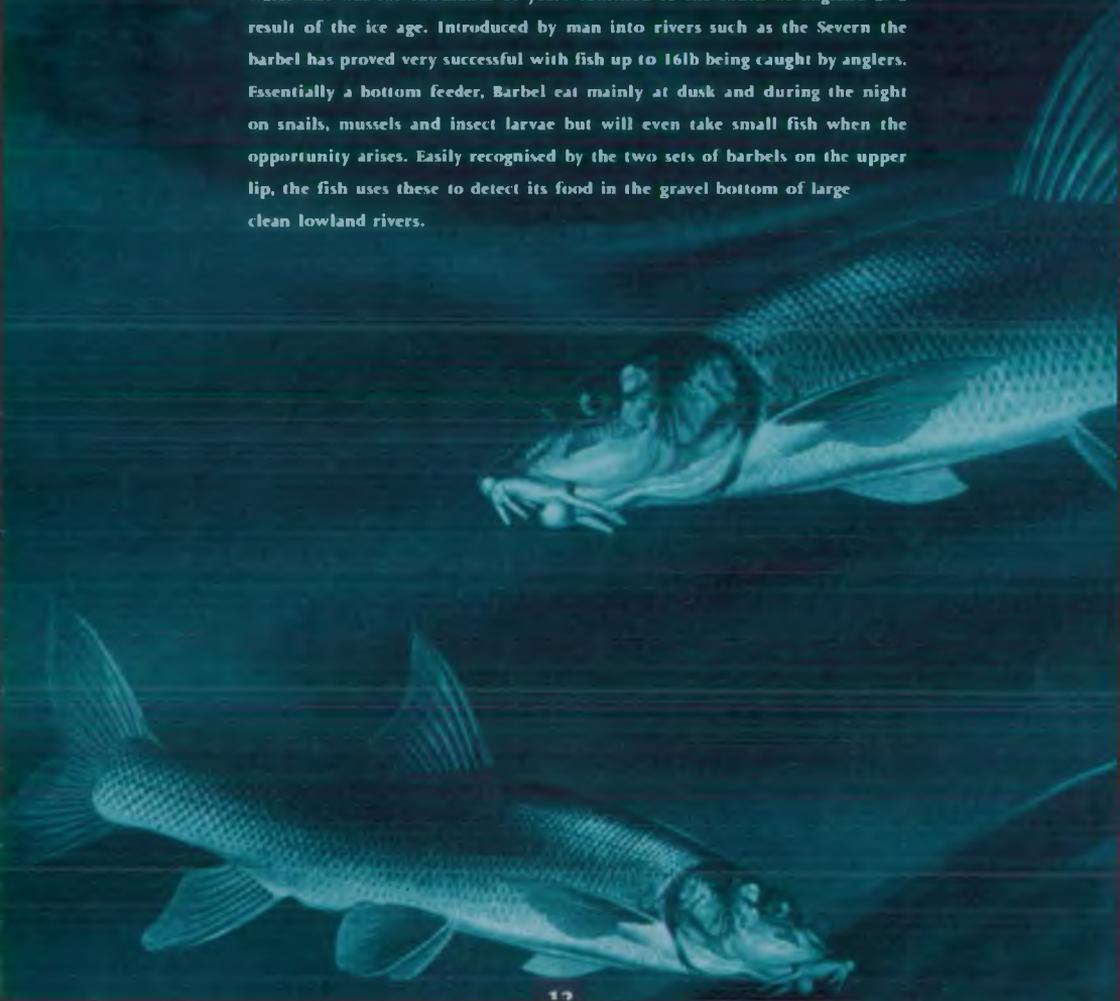

The Severn Fisheries Consultative Council is also a member of the National Association of Fisheries & Angling Consultatives. For further details for membership contact the Secretary, Mr D Evason, School House, Ullenhall, Solihull, West Midlands B95 5PA. For the Trent catchments, a similar function is performed by the Trent District Anglers Consultative Association. For further details for membership contact the Secretary, Mr R N Walsh, 5 Derby Road, Homesford, Matlock, Derbyshire DE4 5HL.

FISHERY ADVISORY SERVICE

The Environment Agency's Midlands Region has an experienced team of fisheries officers, scientists and inspectors who are able to give advice and guidance on a wide range of fisheries management issues. Advice is based on sound scientific principles and will enable fishery owners, angling clubs and syndicates to get the most from their waters as well as avoiding many pitfalls and expensive mistakes. Write or telephone the Environment Agency Fisheries Office nearest to you for details.

From slow wide meanders to racing narrow gorges, rivers provide a wide variety of habitats for many different species of coarse fish including the strong swimming barbel.

In recent years Barbel (Barbus barbus) have become increasingly popular with river anglers. This hard fighting fish is normally found in deep fast flowing water but was for thousands of years confined to the south of England as a result of the ice age. Introduced by man into rivers such as the Severn the barbel has proved very successful with fish up to 16lb being caught by anglers. Essentially a bottom feeder, Barbel eat mainly at dusk and during the night on snails, mussels and insect larvae but will even take small fish when the opportunity arises. Easily recognised by the two sets of barbels on the upper lip, the fish uses these to detect its food in the gravel bottom of large clean lowland rivers.

KEY

Some coarse fish, such as carp, have developed characteristics which enable them to exploit stillwaters very efficiently.

Carp (Cyprinus carpio) are native to Asia but were thought to be introduced to this country by monks in the middle ages as food supply. Kept in monastery 'stew ponds', carp provided an essential source of protein during the long winter months. Variants from the 'common' form include 'leather' (no scales) and 'mirror' (few v.large scales) and in this country grow to over 50lbs in weight. Carp enjoy rich warm water conditions and can tolerate surprising low oxygen levels. Carp fishing is now a highly individual and specialised sport but many people enjoy the antics of fish at spawning time when they splash about in the reeds and weeds. Females can produce over 2 million eggs in a single season and both sexes can live 60 years or more.

Certain rivers have the necessary physical structure and water quality attributes to support thriving game fisheries.

Salmon (Salmo salar) is the most revered of all the game fish. It also has one of the most fascinating life cycles in all the animal kingdom. Adult females lay eggs in the upper reaches of rivers using nests called 'redds' made in gravel. After about three years, young fish begin to change by a process called smoltification in preparation for migration to sea. They may spend one or several years in the cold waters of the north Atlantic where they take on a characteristic pink colouration to the flesh. Fish returning to freshwater to breed have to get past many obstacles including drift nets at sea, a variety of basket traps and other devices in the estuary and fishermen on the bank. Part of this epic journey can be witnessed first hand as this noble fish leaps over weirs and waterfalls on route to the spawning grounds. Amazingly salmon are able to find the actual river in which they were born. Rather puzzling for anglers is that although salmon do not feed in freshwater they will take natural and artificial baits but this may be explained by the fact that this needs to be presented 'on the nose' in order to produce an instinctive strike.

INSTITUTE OF FISHERIES MANAGEMENT

The Institute of Fisheries Management is an international organisation of persons sharing a common interest in the modern management of recreational and commercial fisheries.

Membership is drawn from many sources - professional fishery managers, research bodies, angling clubs, fish farms and private individuals who share a common interest in fisheries.

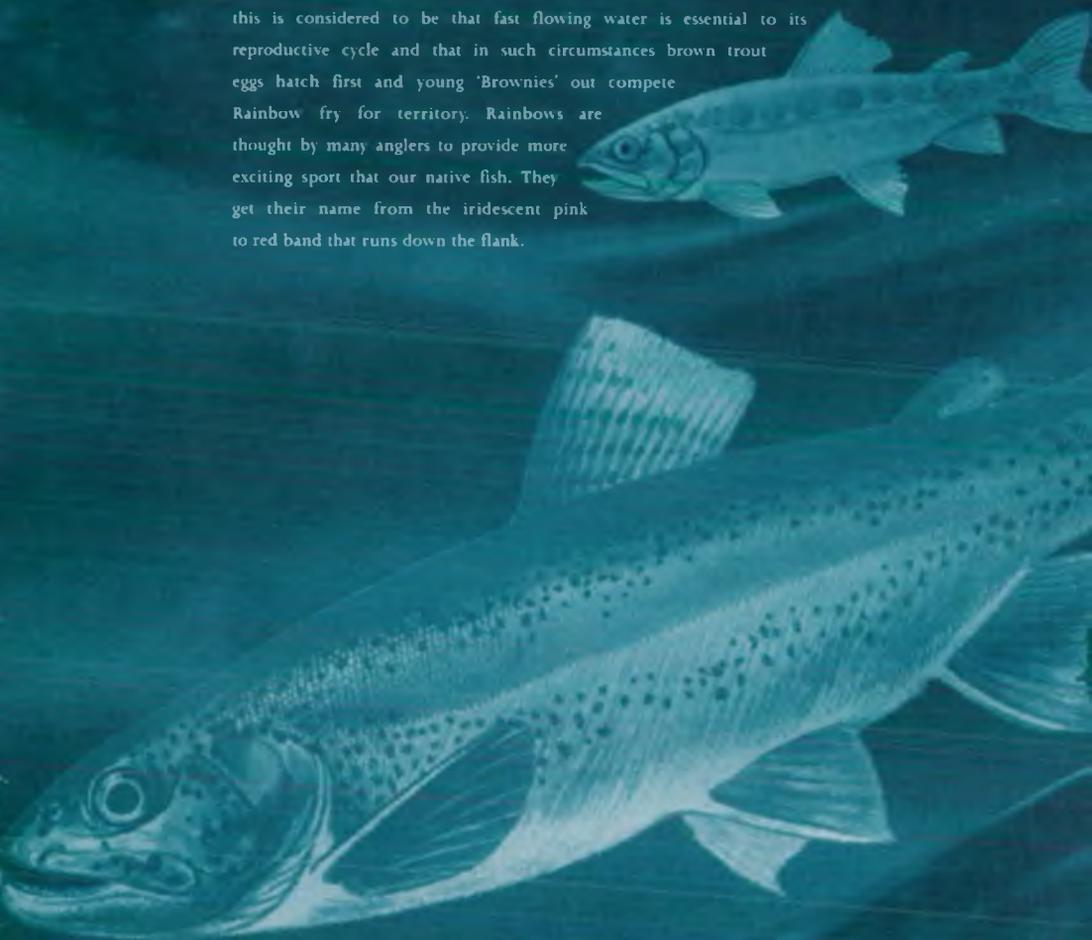

Correspondence courses, at Certificate and Diploma level are organised to train persons in fisheries management and fish farming. Branches organise one day conferences and evening talks.

A very comprehensive catalogue of publications lists books and IFM publications that are available on mail order. Examples of recent IFM publications include 'Predators of Freshwater Fishes' and 'Long Term Impact of Pollution in UK Freshwaters'

For information on the Institute and catalogue contact:-

Many reservoirs contain high quality water and are a favourite venue for game anglers seeking specimen sized fish.

Native to the Pacific coast of America, the Rainbow Trout (Oncorhynchus mykiss) was introduced to England in 1884. There are only a handful of places in Britain where the Rainbow successfully breeds in the wild and therefore most of our fisheries are only sustained by stocking hatchery reared fish. The reason for this is considered to be that fast flowing water is essential to its reproductive cycle and that in such circumstances brown trout eggs hatch first and young 'Brownies' out compete Rainbow fry for territory. Rainbows are thought by many anglers to provide more exciting sport than our native fish. They get their name from the iridescent pink to red band that runs down the flank.

CANALS

Canals often provide very stable habitats for many creatures including roach, gudgeon and the predatory pike.

One of Britains largest freshwater fish, the Pike (Esox lucius) is amongst the top predators in the aquatic food chain. Pike have large sickle shaped teeth sloping backward in the mouth so that it is almost impossible for prey fish to escape their fast, darting attacks from deep cover. Fish of over 40lbs (always females) are not rare but despite their great size pike need very careful handling out of water to avoid serious physical damage. Pike are usually green coloured when young but this deepens with age when characteristic banding occurs. They hunt fish including their own kind using a combination of good vision provided by forward facing eyes and a system of sensory organs located on the head and connected to the lateral line nervous system which enable it to detect prey movement before it comes in view.

A GUIDE TO TOWPATH ANGLING

The region's canals, conserved and maintained by British Waterways, provide some of the most popular coarse angling water for a variety of reasons.

Not only are they easy to get to, running close to or through the region's towns and cities, they are also safe, having level banks and no water currents and benefit from consistently good fish stock levels.

British Waterways fisheries are leased out to over 200 angling clubs, and an intensive restocking programme is carried out each year. Care is taken to ensure that a good balance of young and mature fish is conserved to provide maximum enjoyment for anglers.

A published code, called "The Waterways Code for Anglers" provides some useful advice for canal anglers. This includes making sure you are a safe distance from locks and moored boats and making sure that the towpath is clear for walkers and other leisure visitors to pass by. Anglers can help to protect fish stocks by keeping an eye open for pollution. If any is spotted, please call the local waterway office or dial 100 and ask for Freephone Canals.

For a free copy of the Waterways Code, telephone British Waterways on 01827 252000.
